Tuskegee Airmen Essay Contest

Many years ago, there was a prominent group called the Tuskegee Airmen. Back in their day they were the first black Americans to fly for the U.S. Army. They followed six guiding principles. In this essay, I am going to explain how the six guiding principles will help me achieve my goal.

In a period where blacks were struggling in America, Tuskegee Airmen eventually changed the way the military was and led to integration in America. Under the Roosevelt/Truman era, there was a time in the military when blacks and whites were separate. The Army Air Corp did not want to teach aerodynamics to blacks who were passionate about being a part of the military and serving their country. This then caused the NAACP to address these problems to the President at the time. (1)

Under pressure, the President ordered the program to teach the young black pilots to learn how to fly. The war played a huge role and changed people's minds regarding segregation. While in combat, something incredible happened. Pilots who flew the Redtails never lost a single person, meaning that no pilot or aircraft was destroyed or injured. (1)

Despite this, in 1945 there was an incident that happened when black bomber pilots were trained at the Freeman Airbase Field. It was the scene of a racial incident that made many Americans angry and thus causing the military to re-evaluate its racial policies. (1)

In conclusion, with the six guiding principles, all men followed the rules as stated when they were participating in the war. On top of that, they were unfortunately discriminated against. One of these principles was no matter what color you are, you are qualified and are able-bodied to serve, so never quit. Another principle is being brave and courageous doing so much for the country and putting it ahead of others, so Aim High and Believe in Yourself. The last two principles was that they were always ready to win and were always ready to go and as a result they never lost a bomber.
