As a part of the exchange program between the Air Force and Infantry, the Group was most fortunate in having present for a week Chaplain George E. Bowser of the 92nd Infantry Division. As a result of the many informal talks by the Chaplain during his stay, a fuller appreciation and better understanding of the problems of the "Doughfoot" was achieved. Chaplain Bowser also recounted some of his experiences as a "Combat Chaplain". He expressed his surprise at the vast amount of technical training and detailed planning necessary to the successful operation of a fighter group.

On the morning of the 9th of March the Commanding Officers of two of the Command's Fighter Groups got together for an informal chat when Col Campbell of the Fourteenth Fighter Group alighted from his P-38 Lightning to pay a visit to Col B. O. Davis, Jr., 332nd Commander.

3. Recreation.

Climaxing a season of remarkable teamwork, the "Red Tail" basket ball team won the coveted Fifteenth Air Force Championship, only to later taste defeat in the Adriatic finals at the hands of the fast breaking "Bulldozers" from an Engineer Battalion. The invigorating air of March caused the shedding of garmets forced on by adverse weather of previous months and set the stage for the long awaited outdoor activities. Volley ball, Soft ball, Basket ball, Horseshoe pitching and Base ball held the spotlight in the afternoon's recreational period.

Augmenting Special Service's movies during the month, two "shows" were presented to the Group. Studded with quips and gags, a touring USO Show provided interesting entertainment. The stage show "Good and Crazy", presented by members of the Group, was given the nod as the best entertainment of the month. The cast consisted of members of the Group who braved the critical eye of fellow associates to leave the indelible stamp of "trouper with finesse" upon the audience.
