John F. Kennedy said “Things do not happen. They are made to happen.” To me this means I have to put in the work to have success. Two ways I can do this is to never quit and be ready to go.

Being ready to go is an important thing. For example when you wake up for school in the morning, you can’t just go to school in your pjs and your hair crazy. You have to brush your hair and get in appropriate school clothes and brush your teeth. These are things we need to do to be ready to go.

On the other hand, I really need to learn how to never quit, because most of the time I just feel like quitting. Sometimes I have quit. Then I realize that I was wrong. For example, I was going to play tennis one time. I play it with my friends sometimes and it's really fun. When I decided to try out on a team, I thought about it, then, I realized I didn’t know for sure if I wanted to play tennis. I just didn’t really know if tennis was my thing. So I quit. I watched some tennis games on TV. I started to watch it a lot and then I realized that I could try it again. But then, my school decided to stop having tennis because there were not enough people to join. Now I realize that quitting does not make things better, it makes them worse.

Finally, never quitting and being ready to go can help me accomplish goals in the future. Whether it be making a goal in soccer or joining the Navy, if I never quit and be ready to go, these goals are most likely to happen.
