African Americans had a more difficult past than we think. They would work so hard to help the planes going, to feed the pilots, and to clean their belongings. The African Americans made a difference in our country after this fluke. In World War II, the white escort planes would not protect the bombers, they would just try to show off their cool skills at shooting planes. So the blacks had a chance to make a difference.

The Whites did not like this idea. They didn't think the blacks were capable of flying or protecting the planes. But the Blacks had an idea, they wanted to paint the plane's tails red so it would pop out. Their plan from this is to have the enemies come to them so they could stay and protect the bombers. Because of this action America was very successful.

A similar airforce is W.A.S.Ps, which stands for "Women Airforce Service Pilots." The women were sometimes not allowed to go into restaurants because they had to wear slacks, and women were only allowed to wear skirts or dresses. An inspirational quote to me from Wasps is "anger is as a stone cast into a wasps nest. Do not kill a single wasp; for then a hundred will come to its funeral. For every grape a hundred wasps."

From all these experiences I have planned a goal. I want to start a business to remember the African Americans and the WASPs. I will plan to sell many merchandise and challenges for a family activity. Maybe I could even make this a really big deal in our country. But most importantly I want to set a goal to have a day to sit in silence and remember all those who protected us and our country.

I believe the WASPs and the African Americans have done an outstanding job at protecting the beautiful USA. One more quote that I love and relates to is "bravery is being the only one who knows you're afraid." These stories are very inspiring for all people who think about the history of the USA.
